Guide to Using Visiting Speakers in the MBA Finance Classroom Mar 11 2022 Visits to the classroom by industry leaders are a natural part of courses at professional schools. This article discusses the practical matters of finding quality visitors and integrating them into a course to enhance student learning. The main purpose of instruction at any professional school is to impart to students theory relating to that profession, rather than industry or job specific information. However, there is always a healthy tension between the learning of theory and practice. The question of "why do I need to know this?" occurs in professional schools with much greater regularity than in undergraduate or doctoral education, where "is this interesting?" is the foremost question. Visitors help reduce this tension. A high-quality visiting speaker, working in concert with the instructor, validates the discussion of theory with an authoritative discussion of industry issues and application of theory.
